PREFACE.

IT IS impossible to thank individually all those who have rendered possible the publication of this work by their kindness in supplying the needed information, I wish to take this opportunity of offering them my sincere thanks for all the assistance which they have given me. The preparation of this table was undertaken in order to obtain some definite information of my relations and ancestors and was attended with greater difficulties than I had anticipated. It has been in preparation for several years, and there may be some omissions in the way of deaths, births, and marriages in those families from whom the information was obtained early in the course of the work. I have given a short sketch of the family and of some of its most noted members and also the direct line of descent from the first of the name known to history, with several of the collateral members. In the table of the descendants of Joseph (1), the second generation contains all his children, while the third generation contains the children of Joseph, Jr., (9). The fourth and succeeding generations contain only the descendants of Gideon (21), the grandson of Joseph (1). The numbers run through each generation.

THE AUTHOR.

Richard de Gylpyn and his Descendants.

Richard de Gylpyn, to whom, in the reign of King John about the year 1206, the Baron of Kendal, who could neither read nor write and had taken Richard to Runnymede with him as secretary, granted the estate of Kentmere in Westmoreland County, was the first of the family of whom we have authentic knowledge. This grant, situated about ten miles from Lake Windermere, containing about four thousand acres, was a reward for the signal courage displayed in slaying a wild boar which had committed great devastation in Cumberland and Westmoreland Counties. He adopted for his arms "In field Or a Sanglier or Boar, statant, sable, langued and tusked gules." It is probable that the first of the family, which is of Norman origin, who settled in England came in the train of William the Conqueror, for we find the following record of its origin in an old poem:

Bert de Gylpyn, drew of Normandie
From Walchelin his gentle blood;
Who haply heard by Bewley's sea,
The Angevins' bugles in the wood.
His crest, the rebus of his name
A pineapple—a pine of gold.
Was it his Norman shield,
Sincere in word and deed, his fame extolled.
But Richard having killed the boar,
With crested arm an olive shook
And sable boar on field of Or
For impresse on his shield he took.
And well he won his honest arms,
And well he won his Kentmere lands.
He won them not in wars alarms,
Nor dipt in human blood his hands.

The name was gradually modernized by dropping the "de" and changing the "y" to "i". They have always been prominent as statesmen, warriors, and divines, and have had considerable influence in the advancement of learning and art. Many of the ecclesiastical writings of Bernard and others were held in high esteem and are examples of a masterly presentation of the subject. The estate was increased in the reign of Henry III by the grant, by Peter de Bruys, of the Manor of Ulwithwaite to Richard the grandson of the first of that name. This grant, written in Latin, is still preserved by the English head of the family. Edwin, who married Margaret Layton, was the father of ten children, two of whom won great renown, one as a diplomat, and the other as a minister. George, the first of these, was Minister to the Hague during Queen Elizabeth's reign and was commissioned to form an alliance with the Dutch States against the Spanish, who were threatening England with the great Armada. His recognized honor and ability are well shown by an extract from an autograph letter of the Queen's, which he carried with him on this mission, in which she speaks of him thus, "Having charged Mr. Gilpin, one of our Councillors of State, to deliver this letter, it will not be necessary to authorize him by any other confidence than what is already acquired by a long proof of his capacity, and of his fidelity and sincerity, assuring you you may trust in him as in ourselves." Another son of Edwin's, was Bernard, often called "The Apostle of the North." Although brought up under Catholic influence he became a Protestant and wielded an immense influence in ecclesiastical matters until his death. In the religious upheavals of the times Bernard was tried on thirteen different accusations; but was liberated by his uncle the Bishop of Durham. His enemies, however, had him summoned before Dr. Bonner, Bishop of London, and it was due to an accident alone that he was saved from the serious consequences which would have followed his trial here. While journeying from Houghton to London to stand trial, he broke his leg and before he was able to appear before the judges, Queen Mary died, the reformers were in power, and he had nothing to fear. In those turbulent times Bernard, contrary to the custom, went unarmed and fearless, and was noted for his unflinching devotion to the people and to what he considered his duty. On one occasion upon entering a church he saw a gauntlet suspended in midair—a challenge of some trooper in the building. Taking the glove with him he said during the sermon, "I hear there is one among you who has, even in this sacred place, hung up a glove in defiance," then displaying it he added, "I challenge him to compete with me in acts of christian charity." He established schools and was a spiritual guide beloved by old and young alike. Another one of Edwin's sons, William, from whom the present branch of the family is descended, married the sister of George Washington's great-grandfather. Kentmere remained in the family until the civil wars in Charles I's time, when members of the family were fighting on both sides. As was often the custom, the estate was conveyed by George Gilpin to one of his wife's relations, in trust to prevent its sequestration. Being hard pressed by his enemies he was forced to leave the country, and as his heirs could not get hold of the proper deeds the estate was lost to the family. Part of the tower and walls still stand; but in a sadly dilapidated condition. During Cromwell's time again we find members taking different sides in the controversies. Thomas of Warborough was colonel on the republican side in the Battle of Worcester; but afterwards, along with his brother-in-law Thomas West, he joined the Society of Friends and was a preacher for forty years. He was son of Thomas, of Mill Hill, whose daughter Ann was the grandmother of Benjamin West, who succeeded Sir Joshua Reynolds, as President of the Royal Society. While Thomas was fighting for Cromwell, his cousin Richard was opposed to the "round heads"; but too conscientious to appear to desert his religious scruples, which would not permit him to subscribe to the act of uniformity in all its parts, he declined to accept the Bishopric of Carlisle, which was offered to him by the King after the restoration. The same position had formerly been offered to Bernard by Elizabeth; but he also had declined it. Richard purchased Scaleby Castle, which has been in the family ever since, although it is not now owned by a Gilpin, but has gone through the female branch to Mrs. Fawcett. It had been partly reduced to ruins by Cromwell, but was made habitable by Richard after its purchase. The old tower, gateway, walls and moat are still well preserved and additions have been added on one side. Scaleby Castle, near Carlisle, is a most picturesque spot, and well worth a visit from those interested in the family, as it is rich in reminiscences and old family portraits.

Cowper's celebrated poem "John Gilpin," which became known in 1783, after its appearance in The Gentleman's Magazine, was probably suggested to him while a boy at Westminster School, by a tomb-stone in St. Margaret's Churchyard inscribed "Mr. John Gilpin". This John Gilpin, according to a book published at Croydon, came to London to be bound apprentice to a draper, with whom he served his time in Fleet Street. Then he married, setting up in business at a shop in Newgate Street, by the Blue Coat School where he traded forty years. He purchased Collier's Water Farm, near Croydon, and an estate in Kent. Dying in 1750, he left his property to his two daughters, his son having died young. In the poem, Mrs. Gilpin refers to the children three. The house at Croydon was still standing a few years ago, although only partly habitable. The roof is thickly covered with ivy roots and green moss, and on the wall is the date 1590.

Joseph, the first of the family to come to America, was the son of Thomas of Warborough. In an old book the statement is made of Thomas, that, "After he grew up in more years and his mother Deceased, he ran into Foolish and Wanton Delights; as Sports and Pastime, Musick and Dancing." Joseph was married in 1691 and had two children, when he followed Penn to this country. His wife's uncle gave her 100 acres and Joseph bought 425 acres more for £40. On their way from New Castle, where they landed, night overtook them and they took refuge in an Indian Wigwam. They lived for some time in a cave dug in the side of a hill, until they could build a house. The following account of their early life is given by Isaac, the grandson of Joseph, who lived on the home farm. "For several years after their settlement, the family, as well as their neighbors, labored under several serious disabilities. One was to get their grain made into breadstuff; no mill being nearer than the one now owned by Richard Flower, which was twelve miles; and many persons had to carry both the grain and flour on their backs; and such was the press for work that the meal was taken home, both bran and flour together. There were a number of Indian Wigwams on the farm of Joseph Gilpin and the account we have is that they all lived together in perfect harmony. His children give very pleasant and interesting accounts of their sports and games with the Indian boys, of their shooting with them for days at a time with bows and arrows. There was no quarreling or fighting, but quite as much harmony as is now reciprocally felt by children of the same family or among neighbors children. Whenever a buck was killed it was shared or divided among the whites and the natives. It has been believed and handed down that Joseph Gilpin's philanthropy and patriotism were not surpassed by any in the country. After the second visit of William Penn, emigration increased rapidly. Joseph Gilpin had got his land cleared, and a tolerable habitation so that he became easy and comfortable for a man in the wilderness. From his extensive acquaintance and connection in England he became popular there among the emigrants, who were principally Friends, and as he was so well known there, great numbers of families on coming over, came to his house, where they were kindly received and entertained week after week. As an evidence of this the writer knows that he killed upward of thirty hogs and seven or eight beeves in the Fall season, and the meat was all duly and frugally consumed by the next harvest. Hannah Gilpin was the best of housewives. The product of the farm being wheat and corn was an easy product after the land was cleaned and put into good order, and during the time the emigrant families were at Joseph Gilpin's house they always had plenty and he cheerfully devoted a good portion of his time for several years to assist the arriving emigrants to find suitable situations and to get their lands properly located and planted." Part of his house is still standing, and the last of the property passed out of the family only about thirty years ago. A print of the house can be found in Lossing's "Field Book of the Revolution," as it was used as headquarters by Gen'l. Howe, after the battle of Brandywine. One of Joseph's descendants, George, who had settled in Alexandria, and was a friend of Washington's, was made colonel of the Fairfax Militia at the breaking out of the Revolution and was present with the army at the battle of Dorchester Heights. After the war he was interested with Washington in some navigation experiments on the Potomac and was one of Washington's pall bearers. Thomas Gilpin, of Philadelphia, who was prevented, by the religious scruples of the Society of Friends, from entering into warfare, was suspected of disaffection to the colonial cause and was sent under arrest, with others, as an exile into Virginia. Before their release by Washington, Thomas had died, at Winchester, from the effects of the trip. Others of the family have played important parts in the development of the country, especially William Gilpin, who was Governor of Colorado. Educated in England, and at West Point, he got his first experience in fighting in the Seminole War. The fever of exploration led him shortly afterwards to undertake the exploration of the then unknown far west. He explored much of the west with Fremont and others, and sought to interest the people in the east in the great resources of that region. Some of his predictions as to the value of certain sections have been fulfilled to a remarkable degree. He was engaged in the Mexican War and was Governor of Colorado during the Civil War. His book entitled "Notes on Colorado," published in 1870, shows his power and keenness of perception and is a fitting memorial to one who has done so much to develop that section of the country.

The Gilpin family is characterized by its large families and longevity and it is remarkable to what an extent the facial characters have been transmitted through generations. The strong resemblance and the similarity of nose and forehead, and deep set eyes can be well illustrated by portraits of two of the family, who, though possessing the same name lived eight generations apart, viz: Bernard Gilpin, "The Apostle of the North," 1517-1583; and Bernard Gilpin, of Baltimore, 1826-1897.

The following is an extract from a Genealogical Chart accompanying a manuscript entitled "Memoirs of Dr. Richard Gilpin, of Scaleby Castle, in Cumberland. Written in the year 1791, by the Rev. Wm. Gilpin, Vicar of Boldre, together with an account of the author, by himself; and a pedigree of the Gilpin family.*

This manuscript was published in 1879, by the Cumberland and Westmoreland Antiquarian and Archaeological Society.

*Note to the Pedigree.—The pedigree which professes to go back for twenty generations, may well, in these days of spurious pretensions, be regarded with distrust; but although every genealogist is aware that errors unavoidably creep into the most careful compilations, I venture, for the following reasons, to claim that an unusual reliance, considering its early commencement, may be placed on the roll of names previous to the fifteenth century. This pedigree appears to be based on the researches of, at least, two early members of the family, but especially of George Gilpin, the nephew of the Ambassador to the Hague. It was again, about the end of the 16th century, the subject of careful research by Sir Daniel Fleming, noted for his special investigations, but more particularly his genealogical researches into the history of Westmoreland. Shortly after this, Alan Chambre, Recorder of Kendal, (who, when he presented his own pedigree at the College of Arms, was complimented by the Heralds for its fulness of details,) extended his enquiries into the antiquity of the Gilpin family. This pedigree has been collated not only with an original manuscript of Sir Daniel Fleming's Pedigree, but also with the genealogical collections at Scaleby Castle.
